

University of Colorado at Boulder
Boulder, Colorado

Center for Community Program Plan

Completed a program plan for the creation of a Center for Community which supports the implementation of the Flagship 2030 Strategic Plan and the Residential Campus Plan of the University of Colorado in spring 2007. Constructing the new building will increase efficiencies in operating costs by consolidating two older dining operations into one, co-locating student programs and services in a central activity center, creating a central campus production commissary and bakery center and increasing bed capacity by reclaiming Willard Hall.

The creation of a New Dining Center to seat 900 will result in a dynamic and flexible operation, featuring fresh food production, flexible hours, and efficient service models that will respond to the current and future expectations of CU's students. Farrand Hall and Libby Hall dining centers have been extensively crowded during meal hours since being renovated. The proximity of the New Dining Center to the main campus residents will help alleviate this problem.

Co-locating student programs and services center in the Center for Community provides convenient campus facilities for students, and allows for sharing of meeting space required by both functions. Relocation of the student programs and services functions to the new building will allow the Willard Hall spaces to revert to residence hall use.

JBA's role on the project was programmer, planner, project manager and project architect.

Budget: $65 million

Date: 2007

Contact: Steve Thweatt,
Director of Facilities Management during project now
Associate Vice President
Planning, Design & Construction
Emory University
301 FM Drive
Atlanta, GA 30322
(404) 727-5453